I just talked to Adrian Srb. When he arrived, Neurospora work was already in progress, but Drosophila was still in evidence -- stocks kept.

He suggests that Clancy might have the key information, since he worked on the kynurenine Drosophila project but not on Neurospora, and would have seen the beginnings of the transition.

D.G. Catcheside was in Jordan Hall basement during the war, and would have heard Beadle reminisce at that time. Oliphant and Giese were here, I think, at the critical time.
