Personal Memo from
JOSHUA LEDERBERG to Dr Henry Kaplan.

MAR 3 1981

May 19 – Lewis lecture.

Dear Henry

This is to confirm what our secretaries know: that the University would be glad to have you give your lecture on the 19th.

I am sorry this was the only date open to you because I do have a conflict that evening. I will try to get out of at least part of it but am not there.

As to topic, I'm a bit torn. Monoclonal human antibodies would draw the most people. But it seems to me you would draw upon a lifetime of experience to talk about the Biology of Hodgkin's and I feel that my colleagues would learn the most from that.

Personally, I was entranced by your saga of the Radiotherapy of Hodgkin's at the Stanford conference; but it would have a more limited appeal on this campus.... (and I would profit more from an alternative subject)

I can only offer advice; and we would be happy with any choice you wished.

Sincerely,

Joshua
