Dear Josh;

Thanks very much for the Morgan paper. I had read it previously, looking for some reference to Garrod, but this time I read it more carefully. It was interesting to see that he predicted the use of linkage to identify carriers of adjacent genes — very popular these days. And he suggested that the genetic analysis of diseases was going to be more complex than mendelian modes of inheritance.

The enclosed is a draft of something that will go into the re-publication of G.'s "Inborn Factors in Disease" that Scriver and I are doing. It's part of a prologue — or something to precede the book itself. There will also be an epilogue which will deal with present outcomes of Garrodian themes.

I'd be very interested in any comments.

With best regards,
D. Barton
