Dear Josh;

Thanks very much for the leads on things to read. The O.W. Henry book isn't in our library but someone is working on finding it — without success so far. The Beecher book is an especially good lead since it consists of "Lowell Lectures" which were supposed to consist of examples of diseases that were useful in the advancement of physiology or biochemistry or other of the "basic" sciences, and therefore it gives me the slant on disease of the likes of Paul Weiss, Carl Cori +, of course, Pauling. It is quite different from that of the medicals.

Thanks again.
