Thank you very much for an interesting and informative treatment.

I suspect the problem will be aggravated in the future for several accounts:

1) hardening of attitudes or misperception of canonical laws as by product of this election campaign.

2) progress in experimental genetics that may allow reasonable prediction of offspring with congenital defects.

We have the necessary basic information to do this now for mongoloididity at 6 months gestation or later; actually before this could be verified a substantial number of induced abortions would have to be studied and this may be criminal to practice in Sweden before it can be here.

Why don't we have lunch together some Monday noon?
